WHAT THEY QUARRELED ABOUT

By Christine Carruthers Merrick.

The breakfast table is the zone for family discussions. Here, in normal digestion and tempers, but the majority of the quarrels between them arose at the breakfast meal of the day.

On the morning of quarrelling had been most unfavorable until the middle of breakfast and even then interludes of extracts contributed by Paul from the morning paper. The coffee had been poured, and Frances brought in the rolls, which Paul had served her with the bacon, took a small piece of a little roll and then put it down, the question which introduced friction.

"When are you going to have something other than cakes and sausages and muffins for breakfast? Cakes, cakes, cakes! They would be all right if Frances served a little "Cakes! I never thought of cakes. Sausage? They are so good to digest.

"Never gave a thought to your troubles dear! I wish I could do or do something differ the course in continental breakfasts we have adopted of late.

"If you had more to do, I'd be much experience in real continental breakfasts as I have had you would understand this is very little like those breakfasts. Dignity, "Coffee and rolls are much lighter than bacon and sausage and toast and coffee. I call this a dignity breakfast. Why don't we eat it all I want?"

"Well, dear, you are more otherwise than I am. I like this kind of thing and very well. Continental breakfasts now that it is getting cold I would like something I could keep warm by and that would stay by me during the morning. I would manage fish-balls, or ham and eggs, or a beefsteak with fried potatoes, or something else nearly on a day like this. I don't think sausages and cakes are the right stuff. There is nothing that tastes better."

"But, Paul, I think continental breakfasts would be comfortable for the rest of the day. Why don't you try it with bread."

"Oh, dear, I don't have to eat it, but because the stomach can't stand the strain is no reason why I shouldn't have my rights."

To this Frances made no reply and Paul retired behind the paper. Nothing more was said on the matter, but the breakfast menu, with cakes and sausages were forthcoming for breakfast, and Paul rejoiced exceedingly and said his wife was the best housekeeper living. These cakes best even the cakes made by his mother.

The solid breakfasts continued. Griddle cakes, waffles, muffins, hot pot and biscuit succeeded one another; sausage, bacon, chicken, fish, eggs, and flapjacks or other "hearty" viands.

This lasted about a month, at the end of that time Frances noticed that Paul's enthusiasm over hot breakfasts seemed to wane. Once or twice he remarked that he had suffered the day before from "indigestion, the result "eg" light" on cakes.

With the freedom of the serpent Frances sympathized without comment on the possible cause of the discomfort, suggested remedies, and bided her time. She set about experimenting and had grace given her to hold her tongue. She did not attempt to revolutionize the time-honored occasion when Paul said to his Frances one morning:

"Dear, suppose we go back to simple breakfasts. I feel like a glutton, and have been playing hob with my digestion. I believe that I would be better off with fried foods and hot bread until it is better."

Soon after her husband had gone to business she smiled a long, wise smile.

CATHOLICS OF ULSTER DEMAND PROTECTION

(United Press Leased Wire.)

Washington, July 8.—Only one battleship will be authorized by house leaders, as a compromise with the senate, according to the naval appropriation bill adding two dreadnaughts to the navy bill, was the statement of the navy proponents in the house. BRUTAL KILLING IS NOT YET SOLVED

New York Police Not Able to Fasten Horrible Crime Upon Anyone.

New York, July 8.—Although they have two men under arrest on suspicion, the police today admitted they were completely baffled in their efforts to solve the brutal slaying of 12-year-old Rosie Cosmo, asphyxiated and afterwards horribly tortured while held prisoner in an unoccupied flat at 2361 Third avenue. The child was found nude and bound to a vacant lot in Third avenue and One Hundred and Seventy-second street yesterday. She was able to tell nothing regarding the identity of her assailant.

The police and doctors who have been working on the crime pronounced it the most brutal in the city's annals. Julia Cosmo, who was unusually pretty and large for her years, disappeared last Saturday night. Her frantic parents searched the neighborhood for her and appealed to the police, but no trace of the child was found until yesterday, when her body, slashed with knife wounds and with a rope about her neck, a heavy flat, was found, covered with rubbish and dirt and stuffed into a box lying in the vacant lot. The child died in the hands of her captors, said the police, after vainly trying to trace her movements, arrested Giovanni Gennaro, aged 24, a coal and ice dealer, and Jefferson Edith Gaessel, the police allege, answers the description given them by Florence Matzo, a playmate of the dead girl, of a man who decoyed Florence and Julia into a cellar. The police said that Florence Matzo told them numerous stories that have failed to lead to anything, and that her mental status on his clothing but insisted they came from injuries he received in a recent accident.

"What a resemblance there is with the portrait of your mother-in-law!"

"Tremendous. It is such a speaking likeness that my brother, when he came to look at it, instinctively put his cigar behind his back."

Rich Toward God by Serving Others

PASTOR RUSSELL

Toronto, Canada, July 7.—Representatives of Bible Students classes from all over Canada in convention here for a week adjourned that they might hear Pastor Russell tonight at Royal Alexandra theatre. Tendiness to say that as always, he had a large and attentive audience. He spoke twice. We report his discourse from St. Luke xii. 21: "So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God."

After calling attention to the fact there never was such a day as ours for the accumulation of wealth, Pastor Russell declared that the wealth itself was not condemned by God, but the love of it. "The love of money is a root of all evil." Nor should this be understood to be a denouncer of wealth and the wealthy. The outpour of divine favor in the multiplying inventions of our day had poured wealth into the lap of some out of all proportion to their deserving. Indeed, some of the most conspicuous benefactors of our day were poor people who seemed so anxious to divide their wealth, generously, and put them into numerous financial pitfalls and kept them poor. The human people in the world, he said, are those who have "godliness with contentment, great gain." These are rich toward God, for they possess what money can not purchase—contentment and the peace of God.

The unbelievable many, consumed of selfishness, ambition and pride, are anxious and thinks well and speaks well of others who are as worthy or more worthy of money than themselves, but the comparatively small proportion of the wealthy people are reported as really healthy, while a large proportion of the supposedly wealthy, of whom large testimonies are reported, are really in straits of poverty and needing sympathy themselves.

Pastor Russell Reported Wealthy.

Many such people, with heavily mortgaged properties, seem to be under the
