Packey Has Close Calls With Knockout Causes One Man to Jump Ropes and Run Chicago Star Weathers Bad Storms

KNOCKOUTS I HAVE SEEN NO 24
 BY ED W. SMITH

It was only a matter of time before Packey would have had a more varied experience in the knockout line than that of Chicago favorite, Eddie McFerrer. McFerrer has always been a fighter through every actual knockout in his line, but he was not able to get a couple of occasions that he never ceased to wonder how it was to be managed.

His smelly afternoon in New Orleans, Ray Brown landed a right-handed back fist on Packey's jaw and the Chicagoan felt so heavily that the New Orleans fans started for the exits, believing it was all over. That was in the very first round. Yet Packey weathered the storm and fought on well for the remaining three rounds that he was given a draw.

Yet from the middle of the first to the opening of the fourth round Packey never knew a thing that happened. It was a right-left punch, but Packey didn't know what he had received until they told him about it afterward.

Joe Gattison Almost Kicks Out McFarland.
 Another night, in 1919, Joe Gattison hit Packey such a nerve-cutting clip at the close of the eighth round that it seemed like certain for the curvaceous Irishman, but he took some distance from the ring that night, to get a telephone operator who was getting the story of the battle into Chicago for me and wasn't all too far from a dispatch that followed the battle.

The McFarland people insisted that Gattison's punch was hard after the bell sounded, but there was such a landing on the ball at the time that nobody could tell exactly, and the three were too excited to remember the question.

My pals in St. Louis had many different boxes as Packey, but they too were too excited to remember the question.

Believe This Has a Hypnotic Eye
 One night in Dayton, O., Packey was boxing Harry Terry in a heavy Italian way. Some body had been kidding Terry before the fight with the statement that Terry, Terry, Terry, Packey's manager, had a hypnotic eye and under no circumstances should Terry look at Terry when they stepped to the center of the ring to get their instructions before starting the battle.

"Well, there you see a trance with you, Terry," said the manager, "and you're not to look at Terry when he comes out to you."

Terry believed it and stood in a rigid position, even in the early stages of the fight. Terry's manager, who had been told of the hypnotic eye, was very confident that Terry would win the fight.
